FBI contin of EgyptA

NEW YORK (AP) — Regardless of what cause is finally pinpointed, EgyptAir Flight 990 already has earned a place in aviation history with one of the most bizarre ends to a seemingly routine flight.

An apparent prayer uttered just before the plane's fatal plunge from 33,000 feet is being closely scrutinized by the National Transportation Safety Board, the FBI and the Egyptian government. The tape from the cockpit voice recorder is receiving nearly the same intense study once given to the film of the assassination of President Kennedy.

The central question: Why would a wide-bodied jet with 217 people aboard suddenly crash into the ocean when nothing appeared mechanically wrong and no distress call was made?

One theory is that substitute co-pilot, Gameel El-Batouty, deliberately crashed the Cairo-bound plane Oct. 31 in a suicidal act. That account is being questioned by Egypt. A statement made by a crew member in the co-pilot's seat — presumed to be El-Batouty — just before the autopilot was turned off and the
